Hi, bride-to-be! I'm the marriage planner who helps you create your own personal WOW experience and plan for a lifetime. As a certified wedding planner, I give you access to years of experience, planning and design mastery, and savvy and useful tools. But, there's more.

The heart for ensuring you truly prepare for marriage and have the space to work through any family issues or wounds before marriage really emerged from my own story:

As a young girl, my family adored me. Honestly, their favorite line was "If Meisha says something, put your foot on it because it is bound to happen." Growing up, I really felt my family was proud of me and was always cheering me on. And for the most part, I was comfortable sitting on the top pedestal where they placed me. However, there was something missing...it was the attention of my father.

See, here I was, getting all of this attention but yet, still feeling unnoticed. While everyone was cheering me on, I was only looking to one person and hoping for one thing, which was, to be Daddy's Little Girl...

When I was twelve, my parents got divorced, and I experienced first-hand the impact divorce has on children and other family members. Their divorce made me question whether I could have a successful marriage and caused me to fear the idea of marriage. I was, however, open to learning how to make my own last and I was willing to prepare for it.

Fast forward to the year before my wedding, I was angry and wholeheartedly did not want my father to give me away. Thankfully, I had a spiritual leader and loving fiancé to help me honor my father, even when I didn't think I should. I spent some time working out those issues to the point that my heart was changed, and I proudly accepted my father to be the man to give me away.

The best two days of my life were at the age of 26, the day before (during rehearsal) and the entire day of my wedding.

On the dance floor during the father-daughter dance, I felt like I had the attention of the one man I loved my entire life. For the first time in my life, I felt noticed and that feeling was amazing. That moment set me free to love my husband with all of me. That was the moment I transitioned from the lifelong wish of being daddy's little girl to becoming my husband's lifelong wife.

I want you to experience the freedom to love wholeheartedly, too.

So many couples get caught up in planning for the wedding, for the "day of", but my question is what about the "day after"? I want my couples to be in the best position for having a strong marriage.
